

BIRD SIGHTINGS

May/June 2005

Seth Kellogg, Marjorie W. Rines, Robert H. Stymeist, and Jeremiah R. Trimble

May 2005 was downright cold, the coldest since 1967, and ranked the fourth coldest in 134 years of record keeping. It was also murky and damp with frequent light rain; the month's total was barely an inch over the average for May. Most rain fell on weekends, putting a damper on birding and all outside activities. The average temperature for Boston for the month was 52.2°, 6.3° below normal, and the average daily maximum was just 58.1°. The only other time it was colder was 57.7° in May 1917. Only three days during the month averaged above normal. Rainfall was 3.98 inches in Boston, a bit above average, and measurable amounts fell on nineteen days, seven over par. There were eleven consecutive days of wet weather (May 21-31), and of the four weekends only Saturday, May 14 – Bird-A-Thon day – was rain free! Sunshine totaled just 34 percent of possible, making this May the second cloudiest month on record, edged out by May 1886 with only 31 percent. A very unusual spring nor'easter occurred May 24-26, blowing ashore thousands of seabirds, in particular Red and Red-necked phalaropes, which were even recorded in a number of inland locations. These birds normally are migrating far off the New England coast in late May. Southwest winds, those most favorable for spring migration, were noted on May 2, 11, and 28.

June 2005 began with continued cold weather but was soon followed by a siege of heat and humidity. The month averaged out at 68.4° in Boston, just 0.4° above normal. There were two very warm spells, June 7-13, which averaged 9.4° above normal. This was coupled with oppressive humidity, and the last week of the month the temperature was 6.3° over the average. The high was 95° on June 25, the highest temperature in Boston since August 18, 2002. The low was 48° on June 1, 10° below normal for that date. Measurable rain totaling 1.46 inches for Boston fell on seven days; of the four weekend days only Sunday June 26 saw measurable rain.

WATERFOWL THROUGH ALCIDS

This reporting period was filled with an impressive number of interesting and rare sightings. Waterfowl numbers and diversity seemed fairly typical for the season. Somewhat noteworthy sightings included at least one adult King Eider off the southwest coast of Cape Cod and three male Ruddy Ducks at South Monomoy in early June, one of only a few traditional nesting sites for this species in Massachusetts. An adult Pacific Loon off Nomans Land represents one of the few June records for the state. Encouraging nesting reports of Common Loons came in for this slowly increasing local breeder. A pair of Common Loons was observed with one juvenile in Ashburnham and another was seen with two at Leominster.

One of the most exciting and well documented rarities of the season was a Yellow-nosed Albatross that was observed at Tuckernuck on May 29. The rarity of this species in Massachusetts (there are only six records) and the north Atlantic, the magnificence of this giant pelagic wanderer, and the amazing photographs that accompanied this report increased the excitement (not to mention the frustration of observers unable to see it!). Two days later, there was a report of an albatross species, not far away as the albatross flies, near South Monomoy. Unfortunately, observers could not confirm the identity of this individual.

A monumental and nearly unprecedented spring nor'easter hit the coast of New England during the last week of May. This produced an exciting opportunity to observe a number of pelagic species from coastal locations. Associated with this storm were small numbers of Northern Fulmars, shearwaters, storm-petrels, gannets, and jaegers, and impressive numbers of Red and Red-necked phalaropes. Decent numbers of Wilson's Storm-Petrels were reported from various locations during the storm, but most impressive, especially for the spring, was the report of 627 Leach's Storm-Petrels from Sandy Neck in Barnstable during the storm on May 25. There are only five other reports of 500+ Leach's Storm-Petrels from Massachusetts. Four of these earlier reports were the result of storms during first two weeks of September. However, the largest number of Leach's Storm-Petrels ever observed in Massachusetts (10,000+) was counted during a large storm on May 10, 1977.

A couple of American White Pelicans were reported during the period. One sighting came from May 31 at Winthrop Harbor, while the other came from Plum Island on June 30. The apparent increase of Little Egrets in the New World, especially in parts of the Caribbean, and the tendency of these birds to linger during the breeding season, has led to the observation of more and more hybrids between this species and the closely related Snowy Egret. One such hybrid was observed on Nantucket at the end of May and illustrates the care that should be taken in identifying pure Little Egret records in Massachusetts and elsewhere. Remarkably, a second White-faced Ibis was found in the Newbury area at the beginning of May and stayed through the month. Massachusetts birders will remember that an individual of this species was found in the same vicinity at the end of April. Thanks to numerous digital photographs, it was possible to compare the two birds and determine that two different individuals were involved! The two White-faced Ibises differed in bill size, some plumage characteristics, and, most interestingly, an apparent crack or unfused section on the bill of the April bird not observed in the May individual.

The annual kite reports for Massachusetts included two Swallow-tailed Kites and two Mississippi Kites. A migrating Rough-legged Hawk on Cape Cod on May 17 was not only one of very few reports ever for the state during that month, but also the latest May record by over one week. Common Moorhens were reported from a number of sites around the state and included long-staying individuals or pairs at potential breeding sites at Plum Island, Great Meadows National Wildlife Refuge, and Stockbridge. Single Sandhill Cranes were observed at Nantucket and Northfield in early May, while two individuals were observed together at New Marlboro later in the reporting period.

There were a number of shorebird highlights during the reporting period. Heading the list was the Wilson's Plover which, with the typical wanderlust exhibited by this species in Massachusetts, apparently made its way between North and South Monomoy, Nantucket, and Martha's Vineyard during the month of June. However, the question remains to be answered whether one or more individuals could have been involved. At least one Curlew Sandpiper was found in Newburyport during the second half of May. Also noteworthy were the three male Ruffs reported during the period, including a beautiful red individual photographed at Wellfleet.

Probably the most exciting and unique shorebird highlight of the season involved the phalarope wreck that occurred during the nor'easter that brought other pelagic species to the coast of Massachusetts. The timing of the storm meant that the phalaropes that were pushed onshore were primarily in immaculate alternate plumage. Phalaropes are more typically observed in the state during the late summer, fall, and early winter, and as such it was a real treat to see these beautiful birds in their high dress. It was even more delightful to have the opportunity to critically examine these birds at very close range, numbers of which were seen in flooded parking lots along the coast, and even at several inland locations. The majority of the wreck involved Red-necked Phalaropes, with over 2000 individuals reported from several localities, but good numbers of Red Phalaropes were also seen.

Small numbers of jaegers were also reported during the late May storm, including three or more adult Long-tailed Jaegers (two at Rockport and one at Eastham) and one Pomarine Jaeger at Sandy Neck in Barnstable. Interestingly, the California Gull that was discovered on Nantucket during the winter was rediscovered there in early May, where it lingered until late June! Overshadowing that report was the immaculate adult California Gull found at Nahant in Lynn during the first few days of May, which provided only the fourth state record. Storm-watchers found three Sabine's Gulls in the days immediately following the late May northeaster. Adding to the growing number of interesting seabird records from the south shore of Massachusetts this season was a Bridled Tern observed on two different days in early June in Marion. The winds from the May nor'easter brought several lingering alcids out of the woodwork, including a Dovekie grounded on Nantucket; Common Murres at Rockport, Manomet Point, and Nantucket Sound; Thick-billed Murres at Manomet Point; a Razorbill at Rockport; and several large alcid species at Rockport. Perhaps related to the storm were two Razorbills that lingered during June at Chilmark and a Common Murre found beached at South Monomoy on June 20.

DOVES THROUGH FINCHES

The White-winged Dove that first appeared at Mount Auburn on April 22 was last noted there on May 1, while on May 28 a report of a Eurasian Collared-Dove was noted from Essex. This dove was discovered on a Hampshire Bird Club trip and was seen well by all as it perched on a wire and called, three coo-like notes, unlike the rolling coo of the very similar Ringed Turtle-Dove. This species has been expanding its range in the eastern part of the country and would represent a first state record if accepted by the MARC. Monk Parakeets, on the other hand, do not seem to be gaining much ground in Massachusetts: just three individuals were noted from three very different locations.

It was a great spring for caterpillars and cuckoos: there were many reports, with western Massachusetts experiencing the most sightings since 1981. Six Short-eared Owls on Tuckernuck provided encouraging news; Tuckernuck is one of the last areas with suitable habitat for this species remaining. A Barn Owl seen in downtown Holyoke was the young of a captive pair kept by a wildlife rehabilitator who has been releasing the young every year.

Despite the less-than-perfect weather during May, many birders were pleased with the migration, though it was really quite bizarre. There were days that birds would arrive on favorable winds, and then a low pressure would stall, blocking the birds from continuing north. Late migrants such as Eastern Wood-Pewee, Red-eyed Vireo, and Canada Warbler were scarce and much later to arrive than normal. There was a big push of migrants noted on May 14-15. Marj Rines tallied eighty-four species in just the town of Medford, Rick Heil reported similar conditions in South Peabody, Mark Taylor reported trees “dripping” with migrants in Northfield, Bob Stymeist logged in sixty-seven at Mount Auburn, and Sue Finnegan had a great day banding in Brewster, indicating that the movement was widespread.

Memorial Day Weekend is often when birders begin to wander about the state in search of breeding birds, but the weather this May held birds back. Finally, after days of adverse winds, Saturday morning brought a change, and there was a massive fallout of birds along the coast, especially north of Boston. It was Flycatcher Day on Plum Island! All along the road flycatchers called out. Yes, no need to ponder points of identification; these empids clearly wanted us to know they had arrived! As many as twenty-six Yellow-bellied, twelve Alder, twenty-five Willow, twenty-two Least, and two Acadian flycatchers were tallied. Also found were fifteen pewees, nine Great Crested Flycatchers, and thirty-five Eastern Kingbirds, as well as many warblers. There was similar fallout recorded at Eastern Point in Gloucester, but the migration at Beech Forest in Provincetown, normally good Memorial Day weekend, was lackluster this year.

As mentioned earlier, the weather played havoc with arrival and departure times. A Yellow-bellied Sapsucker, Ruby-crowned Kinglet, and a White-throated Sparrow were reported from Provincetown on May 28, giving them an unusually late departure date; conversely, an observer there on the same day saw his first Eastern Wood-Pewee, making this arrival about ten days later than usual. A Gray-cheeked Thrush was picked up dead in South Boston on the very early date of May 2, almost two weeks before a normal arrival. Another hard-to-explain sighting was that of an “Ipswich” Savannah Sparrow seen very well in the Neponset marshes of Dorchester on May 27. Observers have often seen this sparrow in the area during winter but never at the end of May!

Long-term migration surveys, such as the Hampden County census by the Allen Bird Club and the Essex County Ornithological Club survey of the Ipswich River, provide us with continuing data to show us the trends and fluctuations of bird populations. On May 14, the members of the Allen Bird Club conducted the 43rd annual census of birds in Hampden County. Some of the exceptional results included 113 Red-bellied Woodpeckers, 72 Great Crested Flycatchers, 139 Warbling and 132 Red-eyed vireos, 194 Wood Thrushes, 57 Blue-winged, 290 Yellow, 67 Pine (a new high for census), and 109 Black-and-white warblers, 150 Ovenbirds, 150 Common Yellowthroats, 107 Scarlet Tanagers, 159 Rose-breasted Grosbeaks, and 419 Baltimore Orioles (a new high for census).

The Essex County Ornithological Club held its 99th annual mid-May canoe trip on May 21. The trip covered over ten miles of river edge with good numbers of many species: Warbling Vireo 15, Yellow Warbler 26, Common Yellowthroat 43, and Baltimore Oriole 65.

There were thirteen observers in the field for the second Breeding Bird Census of the Little River Important Bird Area (IBA) held on Friday and Saturday June 3-4, 2005. The area includes upland forest, beaver swamps and meadows in the towns of Granville, Blandford, and Russell, and small parts of Westfield and Southwick. They tallied 118 species with 3278 individuals. Warblers were predominant, with nearly 1200 of twenty-one species recorded. There were 288 Ovenbirds, 117 Chestnut-sided, 115 Black-throated Blue, 60 Black-throated Green, 96 Blackburnian, and 87 Black-and-white warblers, 105 American Redstarts, 7 Louisiana Waterthrushes, 132 Common Yellowthroats, and a Mourning Warbler. Also found were 11 Black-billed Cuckoos, 18 hummingbirds, 379 Red-eyed Vireos, 177 Veeries, and 47 Wood Thrushes. It would be great if more observers took part in similar surveys next season!

Other interesting breeding reports this period included the probable nesting of Yellow-breasted Chats in Leyden. The first observation was made on June 16, followed by others later in June. [Editor's note: See the field note elsewhere in this issue for a full account.] Pine Siskins are occasional breeders in the state, and on May 10, Betty Anderson had some fledglings visit her feeders in Middleboro, feeding on their own but still begging the parents to be fed. A pair of Cliff Swallows was observed going in and out of a nest on the south side of a bridge at Nine Acre Corner in Concord. The last specific reference to a colony of Cliff Swallows in the Sudbury Valley was in 1945. There were two singing Sedge Wrens noted from Stockbridge over three weeks in June; it was a perfect breeding habitat: nice large area of tall, rank, wet grasses aside a huge irregular marsh of mostly cattails. No young were observed though the birds continued singing well into the day. Mark Lynch noted that typically Orchard Orioles are decidedly uncommon, even rare, in most of Worcester County; this year there have been quite a number of reports from a variety of locations around the city of Worcester, most acting like breeding birds.

Among the rarities, the one that “got away” was the most interesting. A large swift was observed flying by the Pilgrim Heights Hawkwatch site in North Truro on May 28. Three experienced observers clearly identified this bird as a swift, though relative to the Chimney Swifts, the size, shape and flight characteristics were much different. A futile search from high points in Truro and Provincetown failed to relocate the bird. A Fork-tailed Flycatcher was photographed on Nantucket, where it remained for three days. Other records for Nantucket are September 1982 and May 2002. An Ash-throated Flycatcher was described from World's End in Hingham on May 20; this species has been recorded many times in the fall but has only been noted in the spring on just a few occasions. Painted Buntings, also more unusual in spring, were noted from Chatham and Rehoboth. A Yellow-headed Blackbird was photographed from West Harwich and a Lark Sparrow was found on Plum Island. Traditionally, southern passersines noted this spring included a Yellow-throated Warbler from Chestnut-Hill, Prothonotary Warblers from Marblehead, Newton and Wellfleet, Kentucky Warblers from Tuckernuck and Northampton, six Summer Tanagers, and ten Blue Grosbeaks.

Finally, as mentioned earlier, Pine Siskins were noted feeding young in Middleboro, and there were many other reports from a wide area up into June, so more nesting may have occurred. Evening Grosbeaks were more widespread than in the last few years, and three Red Crossbills were noted from Sudbury on the unusual date of June 25.
