

FIELD RECORDS

OCTOBER 1988

by George W. Gove and Robert H. Stymeist

October 1988 was very cool, dry, and not as "bright and blue" as the average October. The temperature averaged 50.8 degrees, 4.0 degrees below normal. This was the coldest October since 1974. No daily temperature records were broken. The high temperature was 83 degrees on October 1, and the low was 31 degrees on October 31. The first freeze in Boston came on Halloween, seven days earlier than normal. Several inland suburban areas had a freeze even earlier in the month. Rainfall totaled only 1.60 inches, 1.76 inches less than normal, but many suburbs had heavier totals with amounts over an inch during a gusty nor'easter on October 22. A trace of melting snow was noted on October 8. This was the second earliest snow in the record span. The earliest snowfall on record was a trace on October 2 in 1899. There was frequent fog early in the month, and high winds on October 22 caused considerable damage along the coast.

R.H.S.

LOONS THROUGH HERONS

Up to 220 Horned Grebes were counted at Wollaston, and the first Red-necked Grebe of the season was reported from the Cambridge Reservoir in Lincoln. Pelagic species seen offshore and from land during October storms included Northern Fulmars, Greater, Sooty, and Manx shearwaters, and both Wilson's and Leach's storm-petrels. Although there have been mid-November records for Wilson's Storm-Petrels on Georges Bank, October 9 is a later than normal date for Wilson's Storm-Petrels at Stellwagen Bank. Gannets numbered in the thousands at three locations on October 22, and thousands of Double-crested Cormorants were noted migrating. Among late reports of herons were a Tricolored Heron at Plum Island on October 2, a Green-backed Heron at North Middleboro on October 28, a Yellow-crowned Night-Heron at Eastham on October 15, and a Glossy Ibis at South Dartmouth on October 28.

WATERFOWL

A Greater White-fronted Goose spent the last two weeks of the month at the reservoir in West Newbury, and Snow Geese were at Plum Island and North Monomoy. A Eurasian Wigeon was seen for one day at Great Meadows National Wildlife Refuge. Ring-necked Ducks, scaup species, and sea ducks were moving by the third week of the month, and a Harlequin Duck was present in Winthrop at month's end. G.W.G.

VULTURES THROUGH GALLIFORMES

The most notable report for October's field records was that of a Swainson's Hawk in the Halifax-Middleboro area. This hawk, an immature dark-phase bird, stayed in the area October 10-21 and was seen by many people. An adult Golden Eagle was seen at two locations in the Sudbury River Valley on October 16. Wild Turkeys were again reported from southeastern Massachusetts. G.W.G.

RAILS THROUGH PHALAROPES

Up to 3 Clapper Rails were present in Chatham throughout the month, and Soras were noted at three locations. Lesser Golden-Plovers were seen at eight locations, and a Piping Plover seen at North Monomoy on October 30 was very late. Two Whimbrels were noted this month, and single Marbled Godwits were present at Plum Island and in the Chatham-North Monomoy area. Baird's Sandpipers at Scituate and at Plum Island were late; the previous latest date in Bird Observer field records for this species was November 6, 1983, although there were January/February sightings in earlier years. Four Stilt Sandpipers at Plum Island were also tardy. An American Woodcock was seen on a BBC pelagic trip to Stellwagen Bank. G.W.G.

JAEGERS THROUGH ALCIDS

Pomarine and Parasitic jaegers were noted at Stellwagen Bank and from shore on stormy days. An adult Franklin's Gull was seen once in Winthrop, possibly the same bird that was at East Boston a month earlier. Single adult Lesser Black-backed Gulls were seen at four locations, and an immature Sabine's Gull was seen at Stellwagen Bank on a BBC pelagic trip. Six Caspian Terns were noted at Barnstable, and Common Terns were still present in numbers throughout the month. Dovekies were migrating during the storm on October 22, when one was seen inland at Fresh Pond in Cambridge. G.W.G.

DOVES THROUGH WOODPECKERS

Black-billed Cuckoos were noted as late as October 9, and single Yellow-billed Cuckoos were noted on eight occasions, including one banded at Manomet Bird Observatory. Northern Saw-whet Owls were seen at Marblehead and at Salisbury. A Chimney Swift was noted on October 2, and both Red-headed and Red-bellied woodpeckers were seen. G.W.G.

FLYCATCHERS THROUGH SHRIKES

Three Western Kingbirds were recorded during the month, 3 more than last October, but not as many as the 8 noted in October 1986. Swallows were still present in impressive numbers early in the month. Two late Cliff Swallows were reported in Middleboro on October 15, nearly a month beyond their usual departure date.

The Eurasian Jackdaw continued to be seen along Hummock Pond on Nantucket throughout the month, and a Common Raven being harassed by a dozen American Crows was seen along Route 95 in Groveland. A total of 16 Winter Wrens was reported during the month, nearly as many as last October.

A Northern Wheatear at Red River Beach in Harwich was certainly one of the fall's highlights. This individual of the Greenland race, Oenanthe oenanthe leucorhoa, was found by a vacationing birder and then seen by many the next day. This may have been the same bird reported in September in Wellfleet.

There was a good flight of Water Pipits with an exceptional count of 200 or so in Lincoln on Halloween Day. The Loggerhead Shrike first found on September 29 continued throughout the month at Daniel Webster Wildlife Sanctuary in Marshfield, and the season's first Northern Shrike was found on Plum Island on October 28. VIREOS THROUGH FINCHES

A total of 21 species of warblers was seen during the month, down from the 24 species noted last October. Late warblers included a Blue-winged Warbler in Provincetown on October 2, a Prairie Warbler on October 22, an American Redstart on October 30, and a Wilson's Warbler on Plum Island on October 16.

Dickcissels were reported from three locations, and Blue Grosbeaks were found in Belmont and in Middleboro. Two Clay-colored Sparrows were reported this October compared with 5 last October. There were 2 reports of immature Lark Buntings, and one or two Lark Sparrows were reported from Middleboro. The first Fox and American Tree sparrows were noted late in the month. Good numbers of White-crowned and Lincoln's sparrows were observed in many locations.

At Heards Pond in Wayland 325 Rusty Blackbirds were seen on October 9, and large flocks of blackbirds were reported from the Middleboro-Lakeville area. A Brewer's Blackbird was photographed in Chatham, and a Yellow-headed Blackbird visited a feeder in Eastham on October 18. R.H.S.
