July was very hot, with an average temperature of 77.5° in Boston, tying 1952 as the second hottest July in 124 years. The temperature reached 97° on July 21 during an eight-day heat wave (July 19-26), which also tied for the second longest heat wave on record. The first was July 3-11 1912. The 90° mark was reached or exceeded on 15 days, a new record for any month. Rainfall totaled 1.80 inches in Boston, 1.04 inches less than average. The dry weather of June continued through most of July. Some local areas did have heavier rain. For example, in northern Middlesex County, Townsend reported 5.34 inches of rain. R. H. S.

LOONS THROUGH WOODPECKERS

July represents one of the low points of the birding year, at least in terms of birder activity. Passerines are for the most part quiet and busily flitting about trying to satisfy the constant demands for food of nestlings and fledglings. However, the southward shorebird migration begins in earnest shortly after the beginning of the month, and by the end of the month some species are at or near their peak numbers. Although coverage diminishes from the frenzy of May migration, there is still enough interest and birds to amply fill these pages.

A Red-throated Loon in Provincetown was an uncommon summer sight. The Pied-billed Grebes referred to last month produced at least one young in Brookline. For the third consecutive summer, a Red-necked Grebe was observed, this time in East Gloucester. Prior to 1990 there were only four reports of individuals during the summer months. This year's increase in pelagic sightings is mainly due to an extended trip to the continental slopes of Georges Bank. The usual complement of shearwaters from that area included two Audubon's, which have proven to be regular in limited numbers during the appropriate season. Very good numbers of storm-petrels were also reported well offshore, including 55 Leach's Storm-Petrels which is probably typical of that area in midsummer. Also reported from the area was a White-faced Storm-Petrel, which, like Audubon's Shearwater, is probably annual in small numbers along the continental slope. What is most interesting about this report is that it occurred in early July. Most sightings have been in late August or early September, which, not coincidentally, is when the relatively few trips to this area have been undertaken. The precise status and annual variations of the avifauna of this region is still in its infancy. Rounding out the list of birds recorded on this trip is an adult Long-tailed Jaeger. Awaiting further details from this venture are sightings of two to four Band-rumped Storm-Petrels and 12 Parasitic Jaegers, which may actually have been Long-tailed Jaegers because Parasitics are extremely rare if not unrecorded from this area.

An intriguing and detailed report of an Anhinga was received from Stow and awaits determination by the Massachusetts Avian Records Committee. Heron reports were sparse, although the elusive Least Bittern was fairly well reported. A count of 150 Black-crowned Night-Herons in Sudbury was very high for the location as were 104 Glossy Ibis at Plum Island, presumably at a night roost. There were fewer than the usual scattered reports of summering waterfowl. Most unusual among the raptors was a Merlin observed at Plum Island. Midsummer reports for this species are very scarce and should be carefully documented. A pair of Common Moorhens and 4 downy young were observed at Plum Island. This is the first proven nesting at that location since 1986. A Sandhill Crane seen at the Barnstable Airport was a rare midsummer sighting.

The shorebird migration proceeded apace in a timely fashion. The only outstanding rarity was the Snowy Plover that continued from June at Seagull Beach in West Yarmouth until at least July 11th. Rarities of annual occurrence included an American Avocet at South Beach/North Monomoy and a Curlew Sandpiper at Plymouth Beach. Species reported in good numbers included Black-bellied and Semipalmated plovers, Greater and Lesser yellowlegs, Whimbrel, Sanderling, Semipalmated Sandpiper, and Short-billed Dowitcher. Four reports of Ruff may actually have been only three individuals. Hudsonian Godwit, Stilt

Sandpiper, and Long-billed Dowitcher numbers were respectable, but numbers should increase in August. White-rumped and Pectoral sandpipers were slow to arrive. An adult Baird's Sandpiper late in the month inland at Holden was very unusual. Adults of this species are seldom encountered in Massachusetts and are as likely inland as along the coast. The same location in Holden hosted a rare inland Wilson's Phalarope.

A Laughing Gull found inland at the Wachusett Reservoir in Clinton may represent a first record for Worcester County. Reports of two Little Gulls and three Common Black-headed Gulls were about average for summer. A Caspian Tern at Nauset was unusual for midsummer, and up to three Royal Terns at Lynn were unusual for the location. A small influx of both Forster's and Black terns late in the month were vanguards of the southbound migration.

Both cuckoo species continued to be well reported albeit in lesser numbers than the previous month. Vying for top honors in the rara avis category was an adult male Rufous Hummingbird present in South Acton from July 26 through the end of the month. The bird was seen feeding on bee balm and was seen in direct comparison with a male Ruby-throated Hummingbird. Rufous Hummingbird is a very early migrant in its normal range and the timing of the report is consistent with other scarce reports of adult males seen in the northeast. The Red-headed Woodpeckers nesting in Sherborn successfully reared one young. R. A. F.

FLYCATCHERS THROUGH FINCHES

Breeding birds continued to be found in July, and some noteworthy species included Sedge Wrens in Wayland, more reports of Acadian Flycatchers from Bristol County, and 7 Worm-eating Warblers in the Freetown State Forest. The most exciting find was a pair of Henslow's Sparrows in Lincoln. One sparrow was originally heard on June 28, intermittently singing a 3-syllable song. It continued to sing intermittently until July 11, when it began to sing incessantly, mixing in the more typical 2-syllable song. It remained invisible, however, until July 11, when it finally perched up long enough to be photographed. On July 12, a second bird was seen by several observers. On July 24, one or more birds were observed carrying nesting material, making numerous flights to the spot in the grass where the male had been particularly territorial.

A special thank you to Steve Ells of Lincoln who found these birds and who, together with the Lincoln Conservation Commission and the Massachusetts Audubon Society, was able to halt the cutting of the field and establish a great viewing area for birders who could see this rare visitor without disturbing it. R. H. S.
