

BIRD SIGHTINGS

May/June, 2002

Richard S. Heil, Seth Kellogg, Marjorie W. Rines, Robert H. Stymeist, Fay Vale

The migration period was wet, cool, and sunny. In June the temperature averaged 66.5 degrees in Boston, 1.5 degrees below the average. In May the temperature averaged 57.7 degrees, about a degree below normal; the high mark was 84 degrees on May 24, but the low of 37 degrees on May 18 was the first new low record since October 1, 1992. A surprise storm on May 18 was just in time for the Mass Audubon Birdathon birders to endure an array of heavy rain, sleet, and snow. Over an inch of rain fell on Boston on May 18, while in Worcester, a record low of 34 degrees, set in 1931, was broken when the thermometer leveled out at 33 degrees at noontime. It was also Worcester's latest snowfall on record. Small accumulations of snow were reported around the region, and in many areas north and west of Route 495 there was an inch or more of snow. In the higher elevations of northern Worcester County and in the Berkshires over two inches of snow were recorded. Birders were turned away from Mount Greylock, where up to ten inches of snow closed the road. The unseasonable weather resulted in slick roadways, which contributed to a number of accidents. Total rainfall for Boston during May was 5.09 inches, 1.85 inches more than normal, and in June total precipitation was 4.78 inches in Boston, 1.56 inches above average. Thunder was noted on six days both in May and June; the very heavy thunderstorm on June 27 brought hail along with torrential rains. Winds were noted coming out of a southerly direction on May 2, 5, 6, 12, 17 (SW), 22, 23, 26 (SW), 29-31 and June 8 (SW).

LOONS THROUGH ALCIDS

Glassy seas and excellent visibility facilitated a large late-season count of 117 Red-throated and 47 Common loons, nearly all first year birds, off the beach at Plum Island on May 12. Nearly a third of all recent (since 1997) Pacific Loon sightings in the state come from May. This spring one was discovered on the Vineyard, at Chilmark, May 18. The breeding pair of Pied-billed Grebes was reported on location in Ipswich for at least a second season, but late reports suggest that they may not have been successful this year. A couple of modest nor'easters in June produced some good seabird counts from traditional coastal vantage points. On June 15 some 3600 Greater Shearwaters and 2000 Sooty Shearwaters, along with 1600 Wilson's Storm-Petrels paraded past Race Point in Provincetown. On Cape Ann, an unexpected Northern Fulmar, 430 Wilson's Storm-Petrels, and 1400 Northern Gannets were among the seabirds tallied at Andrew's Point on June 20. Ten active nest burrows of Leach's Storm-Petrels were found under a section of a rock wall on No-Mans Land, just south of Martha's Vineyard, where they were first discovered breeding just last year. The population there is believed to be far greater however, since numerous other walls occurring across the island were not surveyed. Other Leach's were reportedly also present at the more historical Penikese Island site this summer. An American White Pelican, less than annual in Massachusetts, spent two days along the Connecticut River at Northampton in late May. Eight hundred and fifty pairs of Double-crested Cormorants were censused at Weepeket Island in Buzzards Bay in June. This figure is actually well below surveys cited in the mid-1980s (1135 pairs in 1984). Nevertheless, it still represents a lot of guano.

American Bittern may be essentially gone as a breeding bird east of Route 495, with no reports during June anywhere in eastern Massachusetts this year and reports of only four individuals at two sites throughout the rest of the state. Again this spring counts were made of herons flying to the Kettle Island rookery in Manchester, on the south side off Cape Ann, at dusk. A June 30 tally (c.f., last season's counts on June 24 in parenthesis) included 143 (93) Great Egrets, 631 (497) Snowy Egrets, 42 (48) Little Blue Herons, 2 (4) Tricolored Herons, and 152 (154) Glossy Ibis. Three separate Snowy Egrets in the western part of the state, where they are always scarce, were the most reported there in spring in 25 years. A single Glossy Ibis was likewise rare far inland at Northampton May 9-16.

Gadwall are rather local in their summer distribution in Massachusetts. Currently they are found in two primary breeding areas: South Monomoy, where 35 were observed June 11-12; and in the North Shore "Great Marsh" stretching from Essex to Salisbury, where they continue to do very well. Within the latter expanse, 31 adults and 14 young were noted at Plum Island June 16. Several other species of waterfowl, at the margins of their distribution here in New England, but that formerly bred in Massachusetts with some regularity, are, or nearly are, withdrawn from the state. Among these are (with date and site of last known MA nesting): American Wigeon (S. Monomoy, 1987), Northern Shoveler (S. Monomoy, 1998), Green-winged Teal (Muskeget I., 1999), and Ruddy Duck (S. Monomoy, ca. 1997). On the North Shore, in Essex County, the situation is even more grim. Northern Shoveler has not bred there since 1977 (Stage I. Pool, P. I.), Green-winged Teal not since 1992 (Ipswich), and Ruddy Duck likewise has been extirpated since 1984 (Stage I. Pool, P.I.). The widespread degradation of freshwater wetlands once dominated by cattails, including the once vibrant impoundments on Plum Island, in part due to the dominance of invasive plant species such as phragmites and purple loosestrife, have undoubtedly been a factor in the disappearance of these ducks, as well as that of other marsh denizens such as American and Least bitterns, Sora, and Common Moorhen.

At Plum Island a drake Eurasian Teal was present in the salt pans May 5, but may have been the same bird present earlier in the spring. Common Eider may now be expected to be found nesting in small numbers virtually anywhere along Massachusetts' sections of rocky coast. This June females with young were noted in Gloucester and Bourne. A Barrow's Goldeneye was rare inland at Monroe, and very late on May 14. Other "out of season" late waterfowl included a Snow Goose at Penikese Island on June 1, a drake Greater Scaup at Newburyport June 30, and a scattering of nonbreeding Ruddy Ducks throughout June. Hooded Mergansers continue to do well. Broods were noted at Concord (GMNWR), Hopkinton, and Bolton (DWMA).

Currently undergoing a rapidly expanding breeding range in the south, Mississippi Kites have been appearing in the northeast with increasing frequency in recent years. However, a single day count of nine identifiably different individuals, based on age and molt, including four in view at once, at the North Truro hawkwatch at Pilgrim Heights on June 1 was unprecedented, and certainly the highest single day tally north of at least Cape May, New Jersey. The birds predictably arrived on southwest winds in a bubble of warm air. Mississippi Kite is reliable and expected on the outer Cape under these conditions at this time of the year. These late raptor flights also often typically feature numbers of immature Broad-winged Hawks and northward dispersing Ospreys and juvenile southern Bald Eagles. On Plum Island, the pair of state-listed (threatened) Northern Harriers was nesting for the second season in the North Pool cattail marsh, a site proposed by the refuge for conversion to salt marsh. The Eurasian Kestrel in Chatham, which arrived about the same April date as the Plum Island Pacific Golden-Plover, also apparently departed on the same day, both being last seen on May 5. The spring hawkwatch at Plum Island recorded 75 Northern Harriers, 518 Sharp-shinned Hawks, 227 American Kestrels, 83 Merlins, and 21 Peregrine Falcons, all during the first two weeks of May. A female Merlin, displaying the features of the prairie race F. c. richardsoni, including very pale brown upperparts and complete, broad, grayish white tail bands, was closely observed at Plum Island May 20.

American Coots were always scarce breeders in the state, unlike their cousin, the Common Moorhen, which was locally fairly common at several prime freshwater wetlands into the late 1970s (e.g., 60 adults and juveniles observed at the fresh impoundments at Plum Island, September 1973: Birds of Massachusetts, Veit and Petersen, 1993). Common Moorhen has essentially been extirpated from Massachusetts for many years now, but sightings of individuals at three sites hold out hope that they may still nest in the state, albeit rarely. There is no doubt that Sora continues to be in dire straits in Massachusetts, and has been for a couple of decades, as its decline follows that of the moorhen. The three highest counts this spring were of three or four birds, each in May, and a total of a mere three individuals was reported statewide during June. Oddly, MassWildlife archaically continues to maintain a rail season and a daily bag allowance of five Soras per day per hunter during the fall season. At least one pair of Clapper Rails remained on territory at Plum Island throughout the period, while a very rare King Rail was found in Stockbridge May 17. Two Sandhill Cranes set down at Bolton Flats May 4, and Provincetown May 16-27, the latter frequenting a horse paddock.

The Plum Island Pacific Golden-Plover, accepted by the MARC as a first state record, as previously mentioned remained in situ until May 5. Probably representing a single bird, reports of American Avocet, locally much rarer in spring than in late summer and fall, came from Squantum May 11, and nearby East Boston (Belle Isle) May 12-25. A Western Willet (inornatus), perhaps a first year bird, was unseasonable at N. Monomoy June 28. On Martha's Vineyard, a Bar-tailed Godwit at Katama May 4 was of the dark-rumped Siberian race baueri, of which there is only one previous Massachusetts (and East Coast!) record. Pectoral Sandpipers continued their poor showing this spring, with only eleven individuals found during May. Short-billed Dowitchers were also lacking this spring. The best count was of 100 at Newburyport in late May, well below normal. Contrary to the trend noted in most recent Junes, there was virtually no evidence of an early southbound shorebird migration at the end of the month. One or two pairs of territorial Wilson's Phalaropes again were resident in the salt marshes at Plum Island, but proof of breeding was not obtained.

Rarely seen from shore in Massachusetts, two adult Long-tailed Jaegers passed Andrew's Point in Rockport during the June 15 nor'easter, a typical date for this species in spring. Laughing Gulls increased by better than twenty-five percent at the South Monomoy colony, to nearly 1100 pairs this season. The June 15 storm also produced a flurry of Black-legged Kittiwake sightings at both Cape Cod and Cape Ann, very unusual for June. The massive Common Tern colony at South Monomoy also continues to swell. This season a remarkable 8032 pairs were present (see table for the recent history of breeding birds at South Monomoy). However, another major Cape Cod colony, at New Island, Orleans, has been abandoned and is now entirely defunct, although Monomoy has apparently absorbed many of the New Island birds over the past several years. Perhaps others shifted far north to Seavey Island in the Isle of Shoals, off the New Hampshire coast (and distantly visible offshore from the beach at Plum Island), the site of a tern restoration project which is managed by the Audubon Society of New Hampshire and the state nongame program. At Seavey there was a dramatic increase in nesting Commons this year, to 1687 pairs, up from 140 pairs just three years ago. Interestingly, about twenty-five pairs of Roseate Terns also nested at Seavey Island this spring. Two pairs of Arctic Terns were reported nesting at Penikese Island in mid-June. Apparently no Black Skimmer nests were found in the state this year. A flyby Common Murre at Andrew's Point in Rockport was a surprise on June 7.

MALLARDS, DAVID LARSON

PARAKEETS THROUGH FINCHES

Unlike last year, the weather cooperated for a fairly nice migration this spring. The exceptionally warm weather of April cooled down, slowing the advancing foliage, and birders reported fallouts in many locations. Winds were noted from a southerly direction on twelve days during May, but only on two days from the southwest, those considered best for spring passerine migration. It is interesting that noticeable fallouts happened on May 1 and 10, both days with a west wind. Rick Heil reported a major push of diurnal migrants on Plum Island on May 10, when strong west winds from a big high to our west displaced birds to the coast. Some of the highlights noted on the island that day included 14 Ruby-throated Hummingbirds, 237 Blue Jays, over 650 Tree and 475 Barn swallows, and 522 American Goldfinches.

Several bird surveys, such as the Hampden County Census sponsored by the Allen Bird Club (ABC) of Springfield, and the breeding bird survey of Myles Standish State Forest (MSSF) in Plymouth organized through the South Shore Bird Club, give us a better understanding of trends and fluctuations of bird populations. On the ABC count held on May 19, the fortieth year, 28 observers roamed the 23 towns of the county and recorded over 14,000 individuals of 142 species, including 25 different warblers! Another highlight of the census was the highest number ever recorded on the count for Red-bellied Woodpecker (87), Carolina Wren (26), and Chimney Swift (413). Alas, some lowlights were fewer Blue-gray Gnatcatchers and the least number of Baltimore Orioles (191) since 1993. Warbler species in lower numbers included Blue-winged, Golden-winged (only twice since 1997), Chestnut-sided, Blackburnian, and American Redstart. The Breeding Bird Census at MSSF held on June 23 recorded among its highlights 16 Black-billed and 17 Yellow-billed cuckoos, 31 Eastern Wood-Pewees, 117 Hermit Thrushes, 153 Gray Catbirds, 201 Pine Warblers, 73 Prairie Warblers, 66 Ovenbirds, 143 Common Yellowthroats, and 373 Eastern Towhees. Looking for all the nests of all these breeding birds were 124 Brown-headed Cowbirds. The breeding season is a great time to be in the field, and on another survey at Barre Falls Dam-Rutland State Park held on June 26, birders tallied good numbers of nesting birds. Among the highlights were 35 Blue-headed and 148 Red-eyed vireos, 44 Veeries, 63 Chestnut-sideds, 48 Black-throated Greens, 83 Ovenbirds, and 97 Common Yellowthroats.

The spreading of the wooly adelgid may have some impact on breeding birds. This scale insect was introduced from Japan about forty years ago and has within the last few years started to do a lot of damage to hemlock trees in our area. Some of the species worth watching would be Black-throated Green Warbler, Blackburnian Warbler, Blue-headed Vireo, and Golden-crowned Kinglet, to see if there is any decline in the population, since these species are fond of healthy hemlocks.

Some birds seemed to linger well beyond the normal time for heading north. A Snowy Owl, one of three individuals found at Logan during May, was still present there on May 26. A Long-eared Owl was still being seen as late as May 19 at Daniel Webster Wildlife Sanctuary in Marshfield. Red and White-winged crossbills, Pine Siskins, and Evening Grosbeaks all were reported as well.

Many species have been continuing to expand their range. In addition to Red-bellied Woodpecker and Carolina Wren, the Fish Crow has been much more numerous and widespread in western Massachusetts, as has Worm-eating and Cerulean warbler. Common Raven continues to nest in new spots, and sightings in the eastern parts of the state have increased significantly. However, the numbers of Purple Martins, Blue-gray Gnatcatchers, and Louisiana Waterthrushes are down.

Among noteworthy birds, this year saw the return of the Chuck-will's-widow in Wellfleet for the sixth year in a row, although it continues to escape confirmation of any breeding. On May 24 an adult Fork-tailed Flycatcher was found on Nantucket and was photographed and seen by several island birders. This is just the fifth spring record. A probable Scissor-tailed Flycatcher was reported on Plum Island on May 28, but the observers did not get a long look since the bird was noted in flight and then disappeared. Sedge Wrens were noted in Athol and Marshfield. A Prothonotary Warbler took up residence for nearly a month in Hingham, to the delight of many observers. A Harris' Sparrow was observed from the Salisbury Beach Campground on May 18. The clear highlight of the month was the first state record of Lazuli Bunting, found and photographed on Nantucket coming to a puddle in the village of Sconset May 5-10.

HOW TO CONTRIBUTE BIRD SIGHTINGS TO BIRD OBSERVER

Bird Observer prints compilations of birds reported in Massachusetts and offshore waters. Our compilers select and summarize for publication reports that provide a snapshot of bird life during the reporting period.

Sightings for any given month must be reported in writing by the eighth of the following month, and may be submitted by postal mail or e-mail. Send written reports to Bird Sightings, Robert H. Stymeist, 94 Grove Street, Watertown, MA 02172. Include name and phone number of observer, common name of species, date of sighting, location, number of birds, other observer(s), and information on age, sex, and morph (where relevant). For instructions on e-mail submission, visit: <<http://massbird.org/birdobserver/sightings/>>.
