

higher.-Ed.)

good at scaling rocks with a 1500-foot drop below and not much but ragged rocks and a few trees between, try it some time. Otherwise be sensible and take the easy route. (Hawk Mountain is 1500 feet above sea level but lookout promontory rises less than 200 feet above crest of ridge below it, although to a climber it seems much higher.-Ed.)

Rocks, rocks - you never dreamed of so many rocks! For a second or two, at the point of hardest and steepest ascent, panic almost took over, but it didn't quite and we all made it, though probably leaving our claw marks on the rocks! Thank heavens, June Conway met us with the car at the end of the other trail at the top of the mountain. By that time we were satisfied and quite willing to say "goodbye" and head for home. Now that we've caught up on lost sleep, we can look forward to the next EBBA meeting and wish it were not a whole year away.
