

the Nighthawk at Wrangell.—O. J. MURIE, Biological Survey, U. S. Dept. Agriculture.

Another South Carolina Winter Record for the Crested Flycatcher (Myiarchus crinitus).—On January 7, 1925, while going with Mr. Edward von S. Dingle to a yard next to mine, he called my attention to a rather large bird perched on the top of a Pride of India tree and as I looked it flew and I identified it immediately as a Crested Flycatcher, Mr. Dingle agreeing with me in the identification. The bird flew a short distance when it was attacked by a Mockingbird, then to a greater distance, when it was again attacked by a Loggerhead Shrike. We followed rapidly when it again alighted in a large pecan grove, but no sooner had it settled upon a topmost branch when it was again attacked by a Sparrow Hawk, and finally flew across a large area of marsh land to a grove of grand old live oaks in which there is a settlement.

The previous record of this bird in winter in S. C., was published by me in 'The Auk,' Oct. 1918, pages 439-440, I taking a fine specimen on Dec. 11, 1914. Previous to the advent of this latter bird the presence of ice and white frost was noted by me three times.—ARTHUR T. WAYNE, Mount Pleasant, S. C.

Tyrannus verticalis in eastern Oklahoma.—On May 30, 1924, one Arkansas Kingbird (Tyrannus verticalis) was seen along the roadside about five miles northwest of Bald Hill in Okmulgee County, Oklahoma. This bird was alone and kept in advance of me for more than a mile. On June 3, 1924, a pair were seen about a mile northeast of Okmulgee, Okmulgee County, Oklahoma. These birds were under observation for several hours and apparently were established in this locality. They returned with great regularity to the same section of a wire fence as an observation point for food. From the data advanced by Mrs. Margaret Morse Nice in her article on the "Extension of range of the Robin and Arkansas Kingbird in Oklahoma" in 'The Auk' for October this appears to be quite an extension of their range to the east and that, as Mrs. Nice suggests, the Arkansas Kingbird may eventually reach Arkansas.—MRS. WALTER D. ELROD, Okmulgee, Okla.

Northern Raven in Tioga Co., N. Y.—In the window of a local sporting goods store is exhibited a Northern Raven, killed on November 10, 1923, by Mr. Raymond Weber, of Germany Hill (five miles northwest of Owego, N. Y.). Mr. Weber writes me under date of Dec. 8, 1924, "There were three of them and they were flying in a southerly direction a considerable distance up in the air. They looked to be about the size of large Crows when they were flying."—J. ALDEN LORING, Owego (not Oswego), Tioga Co., N. Y.

The Starling (Sturnus vulgaris) on the Coast of South Carolina.—On this plantation during the spring of 1924, peanuts were planted on a