Dawson's "Birds of California" is one of the greatest treatises on regional ornithology that has ever been attempted in this or any other country.

It contains 1145 original half tones.

It contains 260 full page inserts.

It contains 110 full page color plates.

It contains 30 photogravures.

It contains 120 duotones.

It describes 580 species and subspecies.

We could tell you much more about this beautiful set but will ask you to write us for descriptive circulars and sample pages. The sample color plate in this issue of THE CONDOR is more convincing than any words.

We know you will want a set and your ornithological library is not complete without it.
